

another objection will be brought up, and he will say, 'Objection sustained. Proceed,' and go on hammering.

"But I am not going to waste any more of your time in hammering at you with this speech. I only want to say in finishing that if you will cultivate the spirit that you have started here this evening the time will not be wasted."

From C. A. Newton, St. Louis:

"Knowing the character and energy of the business men of Mansfield, and observing your menu card and your speakers' list, I know that your festival board will be a joyous one, and I am much grieved that I cannot partake of its hospitality."

Rev. W. H. Anderson of the Church of Christ in "A Parting Word" said in part:

"I do not know what to say. It reminds me of my first speech. I belonged to a sort of lyceum or debating society, and I was on one side of the question for discussion. I was scared, or excited, or something. I can't remember which, when I got up to speak. I was to open the discussion and the only thing that I could think of to say was, 'Ladies and gentlemen, I do not know that I could add anything to what has been said.' Nothing had been said that time, but a great deal has been said tonight."

"I am proud to know that we have been so well entertained, that we have been honored by the presence of these distinguished men and that we have had the privilege of listening to so many good things."

"Then we heard a bit on the good roads proposition. All of us who have ever traveled on the road between Mansfield and Hartsville agree that it should be improved if we can do it, and I believe we can."

"One gentleman closed his speech with a toast to the Missouri hen. Of course, I, as a preacher, do not like chicken, but I did enjoy the toast."

"Take it all in all, these gentlemen who have spoken tonight seem to be a little surprised to find what they have found in Mansfield. I wish it were daylight so that we could take them out and show them over our city."

"Mansfield is growing and the reason is that we have the folks here that make things grow. You can plant seeds, but if the soil is not good it doesn't do much good unless you use a little skill. I have been reading a deal about hot-beds lately and understand that the sun's rays coming through the glass will cause the seeds to sprout when they might not sprout otherwise, and when you come to Mansfield you will find that we have this hot bed. It gets better every day and I think in a few years from now we will make things a good deal warmer for you when you come back."

"The saddest of all is when we have to say good-by, yet we do not say it thinking that we will never see each other again."

"We have enjoyed the association we have had with these guests and we have enjoyed the good things that have been prepared for us to eat, but the best of friends must part."

"In conclusion, I am reminded of a little paragraph in one of my old readers—McGuffey's Third, I believe—entitled 'What We Live For.' We should live for Mansfield, Wright county, and the Ozarks in general, and we should

Live for those that love us,
Whose hearts are kind and true,
For the heaven that smiles above us
And the good that we can do."
